ABOUT US

Blowing My Own Trumpet is more than just a musical group, it's a family. Consisting of a father-daughter duo Claude (trumpeter, singer, songwriter) and Josephine Lamon (singer, keyboardist) and their cohorts Jack Larkins (bassist) and Mattie James (guitarist, vocalist), the group is certainly a distinctive yet delightful ensemble.

The group debuted in 2018 with their five song EP "Dreams" and they released their follow-up, full length LP "Umsindo".

Their sound is a tapestry woven from diverse styles and influences. They are not afraid to flaunt their musical diversity. With roots in Southwestern African folk music and elements of Jazz, mixed in with Pop and even some Latin grooves, Blowing My Own Trumpet provides the world with a unique experience. Some of the tracks on the album "Moving Train", "Strange Winds", "Surfing waves" reflect their music connection to the folk sounds of the south west of England.

On "Umsindo" that experience comes in the form of ten songs that both celebrate and lament the state of the African continent. In many ways, the record is a love song to Africa herself. The Lamon's, who are currently based in the UK, sing of their wish to see their home again on songs like "Calling me Home" and "I left My Heart."

We are certain that a collaboration with Blowing My Own Trumpet would be mutually beneficial. Their music has struck a chord in our hearts and we are certain it will do so in yours as well.
